I don't know much about what's going on here. But i thought since i live here, my two cents would do no harm. Whether this is related to what's happening or not, I'll say it anyways. If people are planning to expand/ rebuild, i think they should do it with caution and much planning. by that i mean, dont build an ugly village center or whatever just for the sake of having one because the people need one or what not. if some sort of construction/ reconstruction is going to be made, i think we should make it a priority for it to look neat, beautiful, and for it to not damage the open scenery we have here in Reston. No ugly buildings just to save money on good architects, please. Because those ugly buildings may seem like a good idea, but they're just going to come back and haunt us in the future; they always do. Thank you
