

Individual trauma results from an event, series of events, or set of circumstances that is experienced by an individual as physically or emotionally harmful or threatening, and that has lasting adverse effects on the individual's functioning and physical, social, emotional, or spiritual well-being. The individual's experience of these events or circumstances helps to determine whether it is a traumatic event.

Prevalence

Sixty percent of American children were exposed to violence, crime or abuse in their homes, schools and communities in the most recently completed comprehensive national survey.

National Survey of Children's Exposure to Violence (2008)

Exposure to violence is a national crisis that affects approximately two-thirds of our children. Of the 76 million children currently residing in the United States, an estimated 46 million can expect to have their lives touched by violence, crime, abuse, and psychological trauma this year.

Report of the Attorney General's National Task Force on Children Exposed to Violence (December 2012)

In another study, more than 68% of children and adolescents had experienced a potentially traumatic event by the age of 16. Impairments—including school problems, emotional difficulties, and physical problems—occurred in more than 20% of children who had been traumatized. In those who had experienced more than one traumatic event, the rate was nearly 50%.

How Parents, Caregivers, and Friends Can Help Trauma Survivors

- Be a dependable source of hope and optimism for the survivor.
- Help the survivor identify healthy coping skills for the strong emotions they manage, such as exercise, writing in a journal, and mindfulness.
- Help the survivor develop supportive relationships and a sense of connection.
- Do your best to create a sense of safety and stability for the survivor of trauma.
- Seek out information and support related to the specific type(s) of trauma that have been experienced (see reverse).
- Know your role: Be a good listener, but do not ask for details about the trauma. Seek guidance from experts when appropriate.
- Behaviors related to a trauma history are often interpreted as deliberate. Caregivers should rely on positive behavior management techniques rather than harsh punishments that may escalate a situation and trigger fear and anger.
- If trauma symptoms have a negative effect on behavior, daily living, or school performance, consider asking school staff for guidance or counseling (see reverse).
