Laurel Hill Golf Club Marks 10th Anniversary

From the very start, Laurel Hill Golf Club in Lorton, VA was envisioned as a very special place. From its design by world-renowned architect Bill Love, to its remarkable protection of both natural and cultural resources including its designation as an Audubon Society Bird Sanctuary and the commitment to reusing irrigation water, as well as protection of its historic roots as the District of Columbia's Department of Corrections facility at Lorton. This is a unique course appreciated by those who love golf.

Laurel Hill offers championship greens and challenging 18-hole playability in addition to membership opportunities not often associated with a municipal course. This month marks its tenth year of operations and provides an opportunity to celebrate its status as one of the legendary golf courses in this region, as well as the nation.

Laurel Hill was most recently the host site of the 2013 U.S. Amateur Public Links Championship, a prestigious national event of the USGA. That championship brought players and spectators from across the nation to this course. From its earliest beginnings, the golf media has been impressed:

"Laurel Hill golf club shatters all municipal stereotypes with a high-end masterpiece that rivals any course in Northern Virginia...The conditioning, layout and pure beauty of the course makes you think 'five star resort' instead of 'county municipal'."
--Golfinamigos.com

"The decidedly different 'municipal' course occupies 280 acres and takes full advantage of the site's outstanding features and views of the historic prison compound. Bar none, it rivals any course you'll play in Northern Virginia." --Bud Key of Teetime Golf Pass

"Laurel Hill Golf Club promises to be a one-of-a kind arrival on the Virginia golf scene." --Virginia Golfer

"Visually stunning... a classic golf experience for those who really love golf." --Pros N' Hackers
