NATIONAL INDICATORS

Case-Shiller Home Price Indices

Based on the latest available data, home prices in 20 U.S. cities, as measured by the S&P Case-Shiller home price index, increased 5.8 percent for the 12 months ending in July. Home prices in the Washington Metropolitan area posted a 3.3 percent gain during the same period. That ties Chicago for the smallest increase among the twenty cities in the index. David M. Blitzer, Managing Director and Chairman of the Index Committee at S&P Dow Jones Indicies, said that, "While home prices continue to rise, other housing indicators may be leveling off. Sales of both new and existing homes have slipped since last March. The Builders Sentiment Index published by the National Association of Home Builders also leveled off after March."

Consumer Confidence Index

The Consumer Confidence Index increased in August for the second straight month. The index stands at 122.9 (1985=100), up from 120.0 a month ago. Both the present situation component and the expectations component increased. Lynn Franco, Director of Economic Indicators at the Conference Board, said that, "Consumers' more buoyant assessment of present day conditions was the primary driver of the boost in confidence, with the Present Situation Index continuing to hover at a 16-year high." She added that, "Consumers' short-term expectations were relatively flat, though still optimistic, suggesting that they do not anticipate an acceleration in the pace of economic activity in the months ahead."

Consumer Price Index

The Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (CPI-U) increased 1.9 percent compared to last August. Excluding food and energy, core inflation increased 1.7 percent. Through July, the most recent data available, the Washington area CPI-U increased 0.7 percent compared to a year ago. The Federal Reserve Board’s target annual inflation rate is 2.0 percent.
