

Accountability Workgroup Goals: Items without Consensus

Goal 3

“Support survivors and their families with options and resources for [safely] separating/disconnecting/disengaging or reconstructing family relationships...”

Some workgroup members proposed the following phrasing: Nonjudgmental individualized options to survivors and family members. Provide resources to survivors and family members for self-determination of continuing or ending the relationship. Enhance safety for survivors and family members by providing individualized options supported by resources, services and supports. Survivor autonomy self-determination. Enhance safety for survivors and family members by engaging them in individualized, value-based exploration of options, supported by access to a range of resources, services, and supports.

Goal 7

“Create systems of accountability that compliment but are different from existing institutional systems, such as the criminal justice system...”

Some workgroup members proposed the following phrasing: Provide hope and dignity for all involved in recovery from domestic violence (but some said seems like a guiding principle, an absolute, rather than a goal).

Goal 9

“Prioritize hope and dignity in our policies and procedures, health, wellness, and resilience of all people and communities...”

Some group members suggested also: Create supportive environments.

Goal 10

“Train the next generation of interventionists. [Engage the community in what domestic violence looks like and their role in prevention.]...”

Some group members did not agree with the term interventionists or that the training of service providers was the priority of this workgroup.

Goal 11

“Strengthen our commitment and understanding of intersections between violence and systemic issues, addressing disparities, disproportionality, and culturally-relevant options...”

The following phrasing was stricken so as to be more universally receivable by the public: racial justice, economic justice, reproductive justice, and gender justice. However, some workgroup members believed strongly that these must be included for there to be a successful outcome.
