

A Visit to Colvin Run Mill Historic Site

I am going to Colvin Run Mill Historic Site. At the site, there are three historical structures. By visiting these structures, I will learn about the milling process and the history of the families who owned and operated the Mill.

When I first arrive at the site, I will walk from the parking lot towards an archway. I will walk under the archway and follow the brick path towards the General Store.

The General Store is the first building I will see. If the door is locked, I will ring the doorbell. This will let the staff working in different parts of the park know that I want to go into the store. It might take a few minutes for someone to come let me in, but the wait will not be long.

Entrance Arch

General Store

Sometimes, the General Store is very crowded. If this happens, I might sit on the bench and wait for it to empty out. If I do not want to visit the General Store, I will continue my exploration of the site.

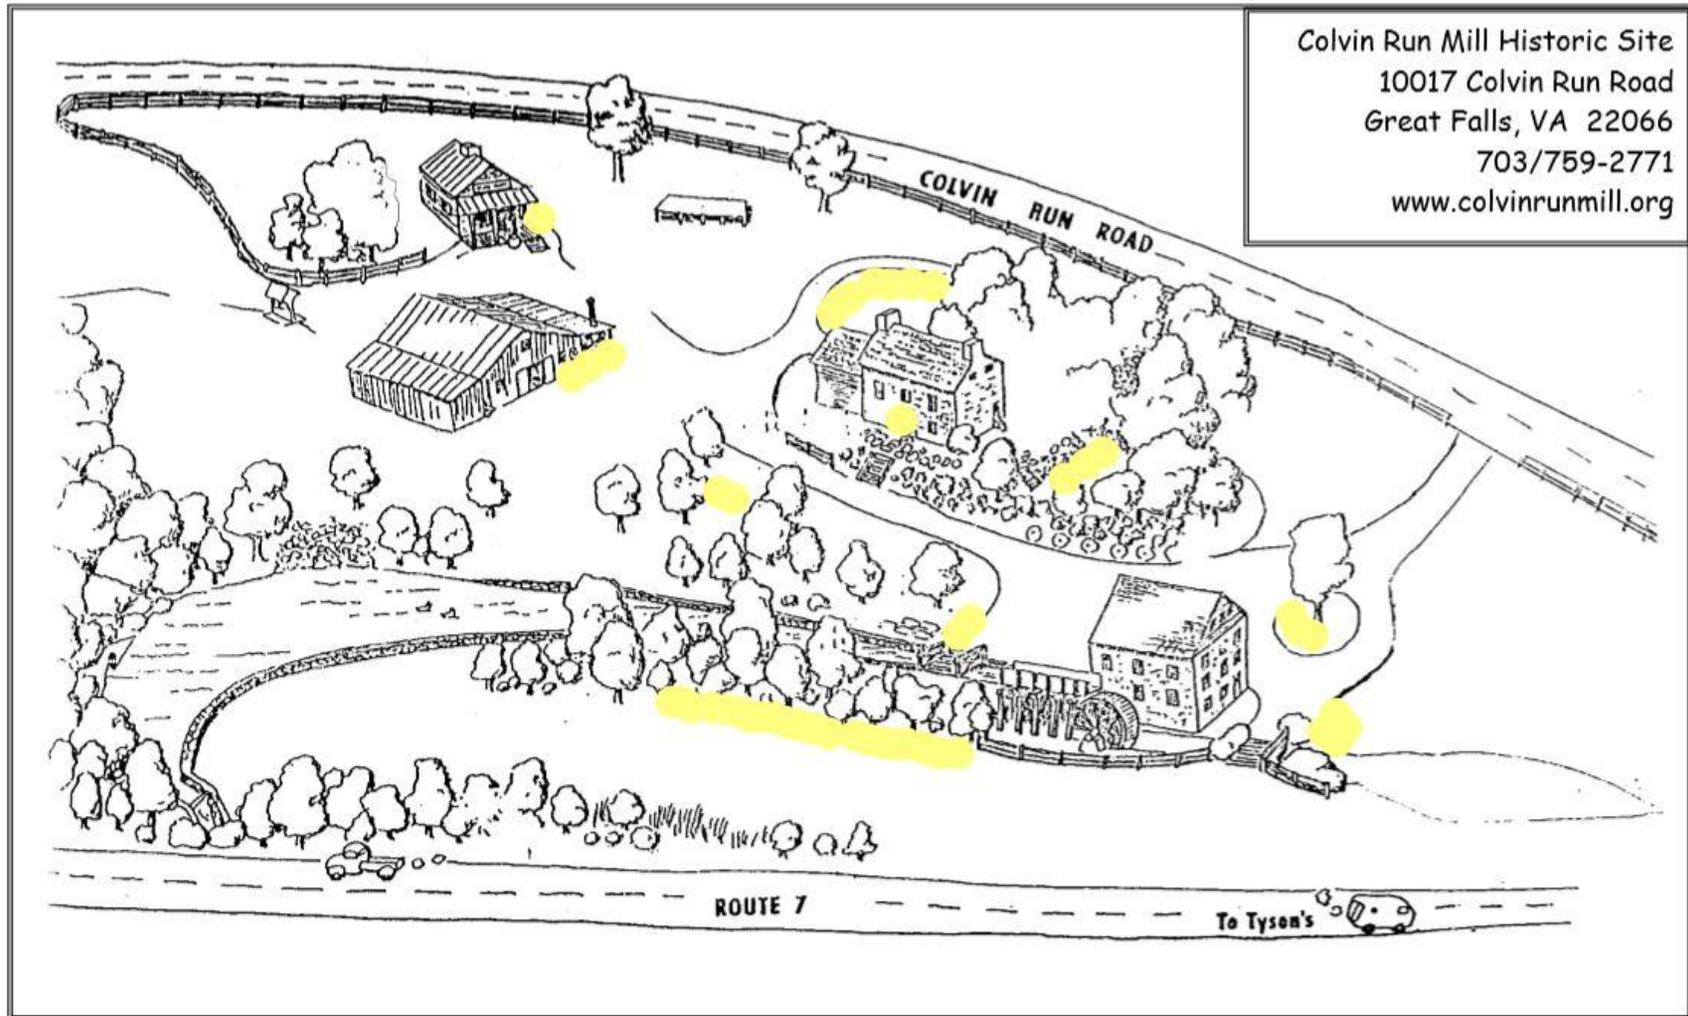

I can use the walking tour brochure to decide what I want to see. If I prepared a checklist of things I want to see, I can use the walking tour brochure to find the things I wanted to see.

From the General Store, I can walk to the other buildings. The buildings are the Education Center, the Miller's House, and the Mill. These buildings are all different. I can read about them in the walking tour brochure and on the panels throughout the park.

I might see site staff and volunteers during my visit. They will be wearing nametags. If I need directions or want help, I can ask them.

Miller's House

Some areas of the site can be noisy, while others are quiet. Some areas may have a lot of visitors, and some have few people. Quiet spaces for the site can be found on this map. If I want a break, I can stand or sit in one of these quiet areas.

When I am ready to leave, I will walk back to the General Store. I will follow the same brick path I used to enter the site. This path will take me to the parking lot.

I hope I can visit the site again soon to learn more about history!

Colvin Run Mill